Spreading Awareness

I We had a great time at the She Women's Expo sponsored by the Statesboro Herald.

Our team had the opportunity to talk with many attendees about autism, ADHD and anxiety. Attendees were able to pick up tools and information about the aforementioned conditions as well as talk with our team about signs and strategies for working with people that have or may have them.

It was a great time, and we hope to attend again next year.

We also were invited to attend the Bulloch County Employee Health Fair, Harvesting Health.

Spreading Awareness continued

A little fall and sensory items welcomed
Bulloch County Employees

We met many of the great staff that work for Bulloch County and had an opportunity to share information as well as make connections for further training possibilities. A popular feature at the table was edible kinetic sand that was made completely of ingredients from the home cupboard. For the recipe to make homemade, edible kinetic sand visit our Facebook Page at <https://www.facebook.com/BPRC.Statesboro>

Occupant has Autism

It won't be long until the Occupant has Autism decals are ready for distribution. We are currently in the process of talking with both of our local law enforcement agencies about getting the word out to families that may need the Occupant Decal.

Trainings for both agencies are in the works. Both agencies have been eager to work with the Resource Center to learn more about autism and to support the families that are affected by the disorder.

United Way Inaugural Mini Grant

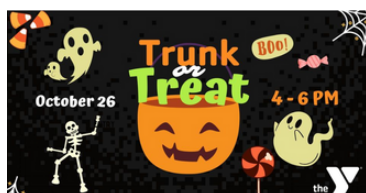

It was both exciting and an honor to learn that we were among the first recipients of the United Way Mini Grants for this year. This grant provides us with an opportunity to bring our autism and ADHD training to groups such as the Boys and Girls club, Sunday School teachers, day cares or after school care givers.

Know of an organization that may be interested in training? Contact the Resource Center at info@behavioral-pediatrics.org.

Books We Love

It's Hard to Be a Verb:

A Picture Book to Help Kids with ADHD

by Julia Cook

Illustrated by Carrie Hartman

It's Hard to be A Verb may be short, but Louis explains how it feels to always want to move. His mom teaches him strategies to help him with his ADHD. This book is about teaching kids' self-regulation. It's a worthwhile read or you can listen on

You Tube as a read aloud:

SHARON SHARES

It dawned on me that while some of our readers know who "Sharon" is, many of you don't. I am the Project Manager for Behavioral Pediatrics Resource Center. I joined the team of this wonderful non-profit in 2022. As a retired educator and school administrator I felt like I had some experience working with children who had autism, ADHD and/or anxiety. I find now that my passion for helping children is still strong, especially for those that are need of understanding.

That's why I am so proud to work for the Resource Center. As we continue to bring awareness to our community, I meet more and more families who I talk to at community events that are affected by one or more of these conditions. They are always happy to share with us, hear our thoughts, get ideas and strategies, and are eager to learn more.

Since starting, I have found a new vision when I see a child having a behavior problem. Sometimes, it isn't always in their control. Awareness makes a difference!
